Barry Phillips

In the mysterious Kingdom of Oudh near Calcutta, the fashion of the 1780s turned toward the 'Hindustannie Air', leading British musicians to perform amorous melodies and dance tunes of North India on European instruments. Barry Phillips, a Ravi Shankar trained composer/performer of classical Indian music, has created a new work for early instruments which re-imagines this historical East-West encounter (world premiere). Supported by the Creative Work Fund of San Francisco.
